

The church of Saint-Martin de Doue

Built in the 13th century, listed as a historic monument, the church is located on a small hill (181 m) overlooking the village. A rare grave of an unknown Prussian soldier from 1871 can be seen in the nearby cemetery.

Brie

Brie is a fermented cheese, which used to only be made in farms located in the Brie region.

It is traditionally made with partially skimmed cow's milk to which rennet is added. The curds are then placed in the dryer, in moulds for draining. The firm cheeses are evenly salted over their entire surface. After fifteen to twenty days, the cheeses, covered with white mould are moved to the cellar for the final ripening.

The Laiterie de Doue, which used to make traditional Brie, was forced to close in the 1990s due to increased competition.
